Komodo is definitely quite unique in the fact that it has two totally different marine environments. The north side offers clear warm waters flowing from the Flores and Banda Seas. You will be amazed underwater by the vibrant colors and diverse exotic fish life, the excellent condition of the soft and hard corals, reefs crammed with invertebrates and packed with reef fish. Current-swept deep cool water sea mounts, walls and pinnacles are patrolled by sharks, tuna and other big fish. The south plankton rich waters (making visibility a 'little' reduced) host eagle rays, manta rays, sunfish and abundant fish life as well as macro life and critters, such as leaf fish, frogfish, sea apples, a variety of ghost pipefish, many different types of nudibranches, pygmy sea horses and much more. The island is also famous for its Komodo Dragon Monitor Lizard, the largest lizard in the world, an alert and agile predator that can reach 2.5metres in length and weighing in at 125kg.
